WELCOME MESSAGE

This MED3 highlights the south shore of the Mediterranean, amongst our Tunisian friends. We know that also there, thinking about public management is a central subject.

Reforms in process, the desire of installing higher performance inside the organisations and public services and concerns of territorial management are multiple projects that we need to work on, in order to reach a better understanding of our shared experiences.

In addition to this, in Tunisia, sustainable development is not just a slogan but an existing concrete phenomenon within the environmental, patrimonial and cultural policies.

Discussing about "Sustainable Development and Public Action", in our dialogues, is surely a great opportunity for each of us to share our thoughts, observations and experiences.

I am particularly pleased to welcome you all, on behalf of EGPA and our partners ENA, EMUNI University and "Institut Supérieur des Métiers", to Tunis for MED3.

CONFERENCE THEME

« Sustainable Development and Public Action »

Public Management is an academic research field that covers an array of subjects: from the financial and budgetary aspects to the development of human resources, organisational structures and quality. Furthermore, it tackles issues of strategies, forecasts and information systems. But as we know, public management takes on its full dimension when applied in specific areas. To examine the question of public management in the Euro-Mediterranean area, we decided for this Third Dialogue to take into account the concept of sustainable development which goes far beyond environmental approaches, enabling us to address themes of social, cultural and economic development. We know the impact of regional culture on the decision-making process and thus on public action performance.

To respond to these issues, we look forward to papers that examine: social development, cultural development (and heritage), as well as the environment and economic development.

Paper proposals centered on public management or public performance in the Euro-Mediterranean zone are also welcome. Particular attention will be given to proposals of comparative public management studies in the countries of the Mediterranean zone, as well as to studies on the management of Euro-Mediterranean institutions.

Following the Conference, a selection of the most interesting papers will be published in a collective book.

The Conference proceedings will also be published on this website: www.med-eu.org.
